At 11:47 o'clock a.m., the Senate stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate reconvened at 11:47 o'clock a.m.

Senator Slom rose on a point of personal privilege as follows:

"Mr. President, I rise on a point of personal privilege.

"Mr. President, I know that my colleagues join me in the enthusiasm for the event that took place yesterday with the vote in Iraq and Iraqi-Americans around our country who had the opportunity to vote. This comes after a week of great sadness for the loss of our fighting men and women, particularly from Hawaii, but those losses and that sympathy I think are tempered by the result that occurred yesterday. Against all odds, against things that we take for granted in America and challenges and threats that we've never faced to vote, the people of Iraq got an opportunity to vote for the first time. And we saw, despite limited news coverage, we saw on the faces of these people how important it is to be able to vote, how important and prideful they were to have ink on their fingers to show they had voted, how proud they were that more than 60 percent of their eligible people – despite death threats, despite killings, despite all the things that happened – went to vote, and how important they took their democracy and their actions and how quickly and swiftly they were, Mr. President, to thank our fighting men and women, our government, our President, and our people.

"For a while it looked at a time that people wondered and questioned why we were there and what we were doing. As the President had announced so clearly, the gift that the United States can give and provide throughout the world is the right of freedom and the hope of independence. And that was shown yesterday in the faces of young children and women and old men who took that right seriously.

"And so, to the Iraqi people, to our fighting men and women who know why they are in harms way, and to our President – I say that, as part of a grateful nation, we realize this was only the first step, but we realize also how important it is to have the right to vote. And in that connection, Mr. President and colleagues, I'm very pleased and proud to introduce one of my staff members who last week after a two-year period became a United States citizen. And she's so excited and she's so anxious to participate more. I'd like to have Anna Maria Preston please stand up and be recognized because this is what it's all about. (Ms. Preston rose to be recognized.)

"Thank you, Mr. President."
