Dr. Seiji Naya over the years served the state, international, and private community in a variety of capacities. As a young man, he brought fame to the University of Hawaii as student-athlete who twice won the national NCAA boxing championship. In 1955 he was the Rainbow of the Year, given to the University's most outstanding student-athlete, and in 1984 was inducted into the University's Sports Hall of Honor.

Though a professional boxing career beckoned, he instead chose to pursue a more scholarly route and graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1965 with his Ph.D. in economics. After spending a few years teaching on the mainland, he returned to the University of Hawaii as a faculty member in 1969. In the early 1970's, he was a Rockefeller Foundation scholar in Thailand. From then until his retirement from the University in 2002, he served stints as chair of the Department of Economics and the director of the Asian Studies Program.

While being an accomplished academic and scholar (with publication of over a hundred books and articles on Asian development to his credit), Dr. Naya has taken an active role in the public world. He served as chief economist of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) in the early 1980's. He has also served as informal advisor on Asian issues to the University, sat on the boards of local prominent businesses, and was the head of the Department of Economics, Business Development, and Tourism under Governor Cayetano from 1994-2002. He was so highly regarded in this position, he was named the state's top administrator in 1995.

Dr. Naya has also dedicated himself to the education of young adults in scholarly and cultural pursuits. The impressions he left on his previous employers have assisted him in these endeavors. For example, for over a decade he was able to successfully solicit a yearly allocation of about a dozen graduate student scholarships from the Asian Development Bank. In May of 2005, the economics department organized a retirement event in his honor and a scholarship was established in his name. Throughout his many stops Dr. Naya has played a large role in the development of his assistants and helped them go on to positions at ADB, the United Nations, and USAID, to name a few. To this day, he is a highly sought after advisor on Asian developmental issues and travels all over the world speaking on such issues.

His most recent efforts in the area of youth education and cultural exchange have come in the aftermath of the Ehime Maru accident in 2001. Trying to find something good to take away from the accident, he has taken a lead role in the creation of a bond that has led to sister state status between Hawaii and the Japanese prefecture of Ehime. In November of 2010, the ninth annual Ehime-Hawaii Youth Baseball Tournament was held. Each year it alternates locations, and last year a group of 105 players, coaches and families traveled to Ehime to participate in the baseball tournament and exchange program. Dr. Naya has played an active role in the organization and fundraising of the various events, including a golf tournament.

This relationship has grown to include not just youth, but people of all ages from our two countries. In October of 2004, over 100 Ehime senior citizens joined with local seniors at the Japanese Cultural Center to participate in a joint exercise session, again with Dr. Naya participating in its organization and execution. In August of 2004, he represented Hawaii at the annual Hawaii Day celebration that is held in Ehime. He organized a boxing training camp in Hawaii for boxers from Kansai. In 2012 he will start the softball exchange and incorporate it into the baseball program. His goal of creating an educational, cultural, and business relationship with the people of Ehime and other Japanese prefectures is honorable and so far has been very successful, as seen by the increase in the amount of visitors coming from Ehime and the success of events like the baseball tournament and senior exchange.
