Comments: There are many other ways then to band the catching of just one species. In force the rules and regulations we already have. Increase the the size by a few inches, hire more law enforcement officers, the list goes on. But common what scientific facts do you have that makes the banning of catching uhus worth it?

Comments: This bill is greatly needed. Less than 1% of the State budget goes to DLNR, yet more than 60% of our economy is based on our natural environment. Pease pass this bill.

Comments: I support this bill due to the fact that funding the DLNR will better equip them to enforce current and upcoming fishing regulations. Better enforcement will mean conservation on certain species of fish being caught, without a total ban. Conservation instead of total bans will benefit those who fish for recreational purposes, your typical recreational fishermen, spearfisherman, etc. does not impact the fish population as much as commercial fishermen who catch for profit and harvest extremely large quantities, which I am pretty sure puts big dents in the fish population. Fund the DLNR so future generations of hawaii can enjoy our ocean past times, for both Cultural, and Recreational reasons.

Comments: I wholly support this measure. We need more officers presence to help curb illegal shoreline activities. If we don't act now, there will be no shoreline resources.

Comments: If there is to be any management of fisheries there must be solid consistent enforcement. Enforcement day and night in the water at the wash downs and markets. How far does Hawaii have to degrade before we wake up?

Comments: DOCARE is desperately under-resourced to be able to effectively undertake the work they are mandated to do. Hawaii's economy is dependent on it's natural resources, in particular those that are ocean related (take tourism as an example), yet the State invests too little in ensuring the health of these resources is maintained. The ongoing degradation of Hawaii's natural resources is common knowledge and the cuts to DOCARE funding in recent years has contributed to this situation.
