TESTIMONY
ON
SB 320, SD 1- RELATING TO FORENSIC IDENTIFICATION

February 27, 2017

The Honorable Jill N. Tokuda
Chair
The Honorable Donovan M. Dela Cruz
Vice Chair and Members
Senate Committee on Ways and Means

Chair Tokuda, Vice Chair Dela Cruz and Members of the Committee:

The Department of the Prosecuting Attorney, County of Maui strongly supports SB 320, SD 1. This measure requires collection of DNA samples from a felony offender regardless of whether the offender completed a criminal sentence, or was otherwise discharged from the jurisdiction of the court, for the qualifying felony offense prior to July 1, 2017, and retroactively until July 1, 2005.

When the Legislature first sought to create a database of all felony offenders, it appeared that ALL felony offenders needed to provide a sample. However, the Intermediate Court of Appeals identified a loophole in the collection law - those whose sentences were completed and were discharged, but from whom DNA samples were never collected. This bill closes that loophole.

Accordingly, the Department of the Prosecuting Attorney, County of Maui, requests that this measure be PASSED.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to testify.

Re: Testimony of the ACLU of Hawaii in Opposition to S.B. 320, S.D.1, Relating to Forensic Identification

Dear Chair Tokuda, Vice Chair Dela Cruz, and Committee Members:

The American Civil Liberties Union of Hawaii (“ACLU of Hawaii”) writes in opposition to S.B. 320, S.D.1, which allows for the retroactive DNA sampling of past felony offenders who have already finished their sentence or were otherwise discharged from correctional supervision.

Coercing individuals who are no longer under the supervision of the criminal justice system to submit to DNA sampling constitutes an excessive government intrusion into personal genetic information. S.B. 320, S.D.1 does not require a showing of reasonable individualized suspicion, so while the courts have generally upheld DNA collection from arrestees and convicted felons who are incarcerated, on probation or parole, or in sex offender registries, individuals who are no longer under supervision of the state have as significant a privacy interest in their biological information as anyone else. Indeed, in U.S. v. Kincade, in which the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ultimately upheld mandatory DNA sampling from offenders on probation, parole, or supervised release, Judge Gould, in his concurring opinion, drew an instructive distinction between those to whom Hawaii’s current law would apply and individuals who would be subject to DNA sampling under the proposed statutory amendments made by S.B. 320:

What we do not have before us is a petitioner who has fully paid his or her debt to society, who has completely served his or her term, and who has left the penal system. In that case, the special need that I identify to maintain the DNA is gone, but the record of the felon’s DNA in the CODIS database is not. Once those previously on supervised release have wholly cleared their debt to society, the question may be raised, “Should the CODIS entry be erased” Although it might seem counter-intuitive to law enforcement that a record once gleaned might be lost, there is a substantial privacy interest at stake. In a proper case where this issue is presented, we would presumably need to weigh society’s benefit from retention of the DNA records of a felon against that person’s right, in a classical sense, to privacy.¹

Individuals who have completed their sentence and period of probation, parole, and/or supervised release have served their debt to society. Forcing these individuals to submit to seizures of biological information, under threat of criminal penalties, may violate the Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable searches and seizures, the Fourteenth Amendment right to procedural and substantive due process, and the state constitutional right to privacy. Should S.B. 320, S.D.1 be enacted into law, it would likely be met with immediate legal challenge.

For these reasons, the ACLU of Hawaii urges the Committee to defer S.B. 320, S.D.1.

Thank you for this opportunity to testify.
