Fully support. Including Native Hawaiians early on in the coastal management plan will help to avoid adverse consequences of destruction of cultural resources and such individuals may bring ideas and solutions to assuring sound coastal management.

What kind of corruption excluded Kanaka Maoli from land management in Hawai'i? And what kind of special mental circumstances would ever cause someone to think that a people who have managed this specific geographical location for thousands of years - are incapable? Why should we need a bill to fix this corruption? Expose the criminals who took Hawaiians out of governance, kept us out of governance, and charge those corrupt politicians with the appropriate crimes. You should probably also notify UH that indigenous practices outweigh scientific analysis and evidence is in the history. Collecting scientific data when the concept has already been mastered, is redundant and costly. Perhaps this is the type of corruption that causes the State of Hawai'i to depend so heavily upon tourism and the military to pay for redundant work to be done. << That practice is detrimental to society and the world as a whole because while legislators continue to look at what I just said, as a "Hawaiian issue", corrupt legislators are technically responsible for all of the environmental damage that negatively impacts people as a whole; therefore indicating that this is not a "Hawaiian issue" but an issue for everybody. I thought that our legislators and people with degrees were supposed to have an education and be a representative of the people who voted for them? This bill just exposed the amount of corruption that our legislators for the past were committed to, through special interest groups that lined our politicians' pockets for so long.
